

Above: The foyer, featuring walls clad with riveted steel panels, is reminiscent of a grain silo, says Angelica Henry, who commissioned the space's arresting chandelier from glass blower and metal artist Michael Allison. The sculptural fixture features blown-glass "water drops," LED lights and upcycled pipes and valves.

Right: Rugged materials—steel and reclaimed wood—offer texture in the living room, which is entered through a curved steel pivot door with glass insets. Bespoke details include the fireplace's acid-treated steel mantel and herringbone-patterned, hand-charred wood backdrop. Balancing the hard materials are a plush rug and an array of cushioned seating, including leather armchairs with contrasting appliqués.
